Country Risk Overview

Description

There is a high level of risk in Thailand which could physically impact individuals and organizations due to ongoing political tensions and sporadic demonstrations in Bangkok and elsewhere in the country. It is advised to avoid all travel to and through the far southern provinces of Narathiwat, Pattani, Songkhla (including the city of Hat Yai) and Yala. These provinces have been experiencing criminally and politically motivated violent incidents. Violence in the Muslim-majority southernmost provinces of Narathiwat, Pattani, Songkhla and Yala is highly unpredictable. Deadly attacks, including shootings, bombings and arson, occur frequently and are usually directed at military, government and security buildings and personnel, but have also occurred in a variety of public places, including shopping districts, entertainment venues, public transit and hotels that may be frequented by tourists. You risk becoming a collateral victim of an attack when you travel in these provinces. On August 11 and 12, 2016, several bomb explosions in various tourist areas in southern Thailand, including in Hua Hin and Phuket, resulted in casualties. Monitor local media for warnings about possible attacks on key dates and follow the advice of local authorities. Heavily enhanced security measures—including martial law in Narathiwat, Pattani and Yala, as well as in the Sadao district of Songkhla—are in place to provide authorities with increased enforcement powers that may be used to address ongoing violence in the region. These measures allow authorities to detain suspects without charge, conduct searches, seize objects or documents and impose curfews. Travel by road can be dangerous. Hazardous road conditions, local disregard for traffic laws and drunk driving result in frequent accidents, particularly in Bangkok, Koh Samui, Pattaya, Chiang Mai and Phuket. Accidents are also caused by poor weather, driver fatigue, speeding and reckless passing. Slow-moving trucks limit speed and visibility. Avoid driving on mountain roads at night, especially during the rainy season (June-October). Paved roads connect major cities, but most have only two lanes. Some roads can become impassable, particularly during the rainy season. Avoid driving or riding motorcycles in Thailand, even if you are an experienced motorcyclist, as motorcycle accidents are common and are responsible for a majority of road deaths. Helmets are mandatory for motorcycle riders (including passengers), but many helmets do not meet international safety standards. Use licensed taxis from official taxi stands, limousine services or official airport buses, or arrange to be picked up by hotel shuttle services when arriving by air. Unlicensed vehicles (bearing black and white licence plates) are not properly insured to carry passengers and may not use meters. Many taxis may not be equipped with backseat seatbelts. Do not share a taxi with strangers. Disputes with operators of taxis, tuk tuks, etc. occur and have occasionally resulted in violence or intimidation. Should a dispute occur and you feel threatened, seek the assistance of local police in settling the matter. Passenger boats sinking due to overcrowding and poor maintenance has occurred. Vessels often lack adequate safety equipment. Rail lines in the far south have been the target of acts of sabotage and armed attack. A number of train accidents have occurred in the past few years, some causing injuries and deaths. Political instability in Thailand has created a volatile and unpredictable security environment that has persisted throughout the country, particularly in the capital, Bangkok. Legal provisions allow the military to retain and exercise sweeping powers that include the right to prevent public gatherings, censor media, impose curfews, set up checkpoints, restrict movement, search for weapons and exercise force in response to violence. Such measures could be enforced at any time. There is an increased military presence throughout the country. Some television, radio stations and web sites may be unavailable and access to social media services may be intermittently disabled. Be particularly vigilant when travelling to the Thailand-Myanmar border areas in the provinces of Tak and Mae Hong Son. Occasional violence, banditry and clashes between government forces, rebel units and drug traffickers occur. Incursions and shelling have occurred. Border crossing points may be closed without notice. Cross at designated border crossing points only, with the required travel documentation. There have been frequent clashes in the past between Thailand and Cambodia over a border dispute in this region. While the situation has improved since the 2013 International Court of Justice ruling that Cambodia has sovereignty over the entire territory of the Preah Vihear temple, tensions may remain. The presence of landmines has been reported in this area. Exercise a high degree of caution if you are travelling to all other areas of the Thai-Cambodian border. Public gatherings of more than five people are prohibited. However, demonstrations still occur. There is currently an increased potential for demonstrations due to ongoing political instability. Demonstration sites include the areas around the Victory Monument and the Democracy Monument, and the Ratchaprasong intersection in central Bangkok. Other areas of the city may also be affected by protests and associated movements. Demonstrations could also take place in Chiang Mai, Phuket and Surat Thani. Demonstrations may cause traffic and public transportation disruptions due to the blocking of major roads and intersections and closures of mass transit (BTS) stations. Violence associated with demonstrations has occasionally intensified. Several incidents have resulted in deaths and injuries. Indiscriminate attacks using explosive devices and firearms have taken place in busy public areas during the day and at night. On occasion, police have responded with tear gas, water cannons and rubber bullets in their attempts to deter protesters. Attacks do not specifically target tourists or foreigners, but the danger of being in the wrong place at the wrong time is always present. Maintain a high level of personal security awareness at all times, and avoid demonstration and large gathering sites and surrounding areas, as well as military installations and concentrations of security personnel. Follow the advice of local authorities and remain informed of current events by monitoring available media, including social media. There is a threat of terrorism in Thailand. Small-scale bomb attacks have occurred in public places in recent years. Further attacks are likely; however, foreigners have not been directly targeted. Targets could include government buildings, hospitals, places of worship, schools, transportation hubs and public areas such as tourist attractions, restaurants, bars, coffee shops, shopping centres, markets and hotels. On August 12, 2016 coordinated explosions causing casualties occurred in Phuket, Surat Thani, Phang Nga and Hua Hin. Be aware of your surroundings at all times in public places, and monitor local media. Violent crime against foreigners occurs occasionally. Petty crime, such as purse snatching, pickpocketing and theft, is common. Do not leave bags unattended. Ensure that your personal belongings, passports and travel documents are secure at all times, especially in tourist areas, crowded markets and bus or train stations. Thieves sometimes use razors to slit open purses or bags to remove the contents. Use only reputable transportation companies.

Thefts have been reported on buses and vans that provide transport services throughout the country. Personal belongings, including passports, have been stolen from luggage compartments under buses, especially on long-distance journeys. Break-ins occur at budget guesthouses, sometimes while guests are asleep in their rooms. Be careful at night in entertainment areas throughout the country, particularly during full moon parties in Koh Phangan and similar events in other popular tourist locations. Robberies, injuries, drug abuse, arrests, assaults (including sexual assaults) and deaths occur during these events. Passport thefts and losses are extremely common. Foreigners have been targeted in incidents of drink spiking, which is often combined with sexual assault or theft. Never leave food or drinks unattended or in the care of strangers, and pay attention when drinks are being prepared and served. Seek immediate medical attention if you suspect that you have been drugged. Sexual assaults against foreign women have occurred. Foreigners visiting Thailand regularly report having fallen victim to a variety of scams. Before renting a motorcycle or jet-ski, read all rental contracts thoroughly to ensure that the vehicle is insured to cover damage and theft. Only rent from reputable companies. Never leave your passport as collateral. Claims of damage allegedly caused by the renter have been made upon return of the equipment. In some cases, renters who refused to pay were harassed and threatened, and their passports (left as collateral) were withheld. In other cases, particularly with jet-skis, accidents have been allegedly staged to create damage for which the rental company seeks compensation from the renter. In cases of motorcycle rentals, some companies have been known to steal the motorcycle and claim compensation from the renter for the loss. When dealing with travel agencies, ensure that the company is a reputable tour organization before providing payment. In known scams involving gems and jewellery, merchants sell lower-quality items at inflated prices with promises that the items can be resold at a profit. The guarantees that merchants offer are not always honoured. Carefully consider all purchases if you are not knowledgeable about gems and jewellery. For further information and to report disputes, contact the Tourism Authority of Thailand online or call 1672 (press 9 for English). Report all incidents of crime or scams to the Thai police in the jurisdiction where the incident occurred, and before leaving Thailand. Contact the Tourist Police and the Tourist Assistance Centre by calling 1155 toll-free. Pirate attacks occur in coastal waters and, in some cases, farther out at sea. Mariners should take appropriate precautions. Deaths have occurred as a result of contact with poisonous sea jellies off Koh Pha-ngan, Koh Lanta, Koh Phi Phi, Krabi and Phuket. Exercise extreme caution when swimming in these areas. If stung, seek immediate medical assistance. Riptides in coastal areas can be strong, including the popular destinations of Cha-am/Hua Hin, Koh Samui, Pattaya, Phuket and Rayong. There have been a number of deaths due to drowning. Heed flag warnings and under no circumstances swim when a red flag is displayed. Diving schools and rescue services may not adhere to international standards. Rent water sports equipment only from operators affiliated with major international training organizations. There have been cases of poisoning linked to chemical pesticides, including phosphine. Seek immediate medical assistance if you believe that you have been exposed to a chemical pesticide and are experiencing unusual symptoms. Seek information on whether or not chemical pesticides, such as phosphine, are used in your accommodations. Always carry your passport and visa, as you may be asked to prove your identity and date of entry into the country. Failure to provide internationally recognized identification could result in detention. The Tourist Authority of Thailand offers general advice for tourists. Dial 1672 and press 9 for English.
